

Spear and Jackson

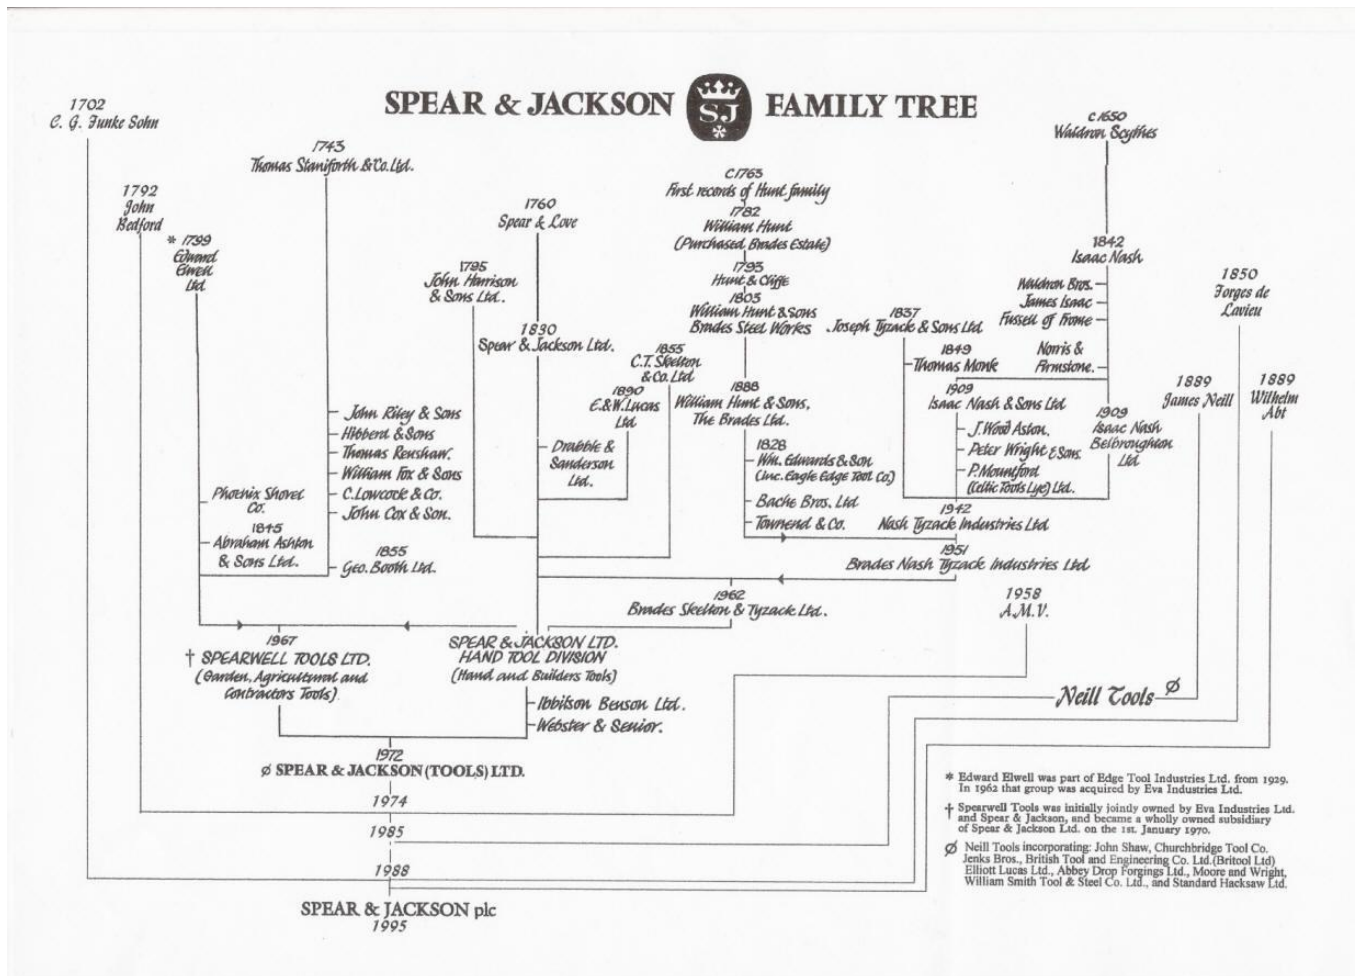

incorporating the following firms who also made billhooks

Edward Elwell, John & Isaac Fussell, John Harrison, William Hunt (Brades), Isaac Nash,
John Riley, C.T. Skelton, Thomas Staniforth, Joseph Tyzack

The roots of Spear & Jackson date to 1760, when drapery maker John Love decided to found a steelmaking company in Sheffield, England, where that country's production of steel, cutlery, and tools were becoming centered due to an abundance of raw materials. He was joined in the business by Alexander Spear, a wealthy merchant from the nearby town of Wakefield, and the new firm took the name Spear & Love.

Over the following decades the company came to focus on producing saws, and business grew. In 1814, with the firm now run by Alexander Spear's nephew John Spear, an apprentice named Sam Jackson was added. Jackson proved a capable assistant, and in 1830 the company was renamed Spear & Jackson.

The firm continued to produce saws and other tools throughout the 19th and into the 20th century. In 1962 the company acquired Brades Nash & Tyzack Industries Ltd., and in 1971 bought Spearwell Tools.

SCYTHES, SLASHERS AND HOOKS

All the articles shown in this section of the catalogue are manufactured at our Belbroughton factory, situated in the middle of a picturesque village in Worcestershire. In this village the craft of Scythe making has been carried on for centuries, and the method of manufacture is basically the same to-day as it was 100 years ago. Records exist which show that Scythe Blades were made here in the 16th century by the Waldron family and continuously by that family up to the end of the 19th century when Isaac Nash purchased the Waldron business. Our Waldron Brand is still the most important brand sold in the U.S.A. and Irish markets.

To-day use is still made of the waterpower derived from the lovely fast flowing-trout stream which passes through the village, and the water-driven tilt hammers are still workable, although they have been replaced by more modern types of hammers and machinery.

During the year we have numbers of visitors, and we are always happy to show any of our customers round this rural industry of ours in the village where Isaac Nash started making Scythes in 1840.

SCYTHE BLADES, ETC.

THE "UNIVERSAL" BALL JOINT SCYTHE

The old fixed blade method of attaching Scythe Blade to sned (or snath) becomes obsolete when covered with the "UNIVERSAL" BALL JOINT FITMENT.

By this method, a riveted ball is fitted to the tang of the scythe blade, and a hinged housing fitted to the end of any type of sned. The ball end of the scythe blade fits into the sned housing, and by a slight heel adjustment the blade can be set for any type of mowing.

The "UNIVERSAL" BALL JOINT SCYTHE is supplied ready for immediate use. The scythe sned attachment is interchangeable, and replacement blades can be obtained with ball fitting in all lengths, and will fit accurately into any original housing.

The "UNIVERSAL" BALL JOINT SCYTHE can be quickly dismantled for ease and safety in carrying.
